The Greatest Artist in the World

Zheng is a famous artist in China. People come from everywhere to see his paintings. Zheng is proud of his paintings—maybe too proud. He thinks he's the best artist who ever lived.

One day, Zheng hears that the Emperor wants a new portrait of himself. So, Zheng goes to the palace to show the Emperor his paintings. Many other artists are there, but Zheng is sure that the Emperor will like his paintings the best. But when he shows them to the Emperor's advisor, the advisor just laughs.

"Go to the Li River," says the advisor. "The greatest artist in the world lives there. You can learn a lot from her."

Zheng is very angry, but he packs his bags and travels to the Li River. He arrives at a village and asks a woman, "Where does the great artist live?" The woman smiles and points to the river.

The next morning, Zheng takes a boat and starts his journey to find the greatest artist in the world. The small boat travels quietly down the river, past forests, mountains, and waterfalls. Then, as evening comes, the sky and water turn a beautiful blue color. It is so beautiful that Zheng begins to cry. And then he understands: the greatest artist in the world is Nature.

In picture A, it's raining.

In picture B, it's sunny.

Solar Eclipses

Is it a bird? Is it a plane? No, these people are looking at the sky to watch a solar eclipse. A solar eclipse is when the moon goes between the Earth and the sun. The moon stops the sun's light from getting to the Earth, so it is darker than usual in the daytime. It's a very unusual event, and it changes animals' behavior. Birds stop singing, for example.

You can only see eclipses in one small part of the Earth and only for a few minutes, so you must be in the right place at the right time. Also, they don't happen very often in each place. Your town only has an eclipse about every four hundred years! There is usually a solar eclipse somewhere in the world each year. Some people love watching eclipses, so they travel all around the world to see them.

It isn't safe to look at an eclipse. The sun's rays can hurt your eyes, so you must never look at the sun! Wear special eclipse glasses (these are much darker than normal sunglasses) or make a "pinhole viewer." Make a small hole in a piece of paper and hold it over another piece of paper. You can see the shape of the eclipse on the paper.

Archaeologists are looking for the roads and buildings of the ancient Maya people. A new machine using lidar is helping them find the remains of old Maya towns and villages. Marcello Canuto is a National Geographic Explorer. He says that it is difficult to look for the remains in the forest, but with lidar, they can now see the shapes of buildings and roads under the trees.

Did the archaeologists learn anything new from the lidar machine? Yes, they did. They believed that the ancient Maya people lived in small houses in small villages, but the lidar pictures changed their ideas. They showed a lot of villages and cities. Marcello thinks that between five and ten million people lived in the area.

The ancient Maya people didn't have electricity or horses to help them to carry things, but they built a lot of villages and cities. All these people needed food and water, so there were a lot of farms to grow food and roads to transport it to the cities. They were some of the largest cities in the world at the time!

The Feast

A chief wanted to give a feast for all his people, so he sent his men to every village. The men said, "The chief invites you to a feast at his house. He asks each of you to bring a gourd of mango juice and to pour it into a pot at the door."

One man, Akin, wanted to go to the feast very much. But he had no mango juice at home. His wife said to him, "You must buy some." But Akin said, "I am not going to buy juice. It is not my feast. It is the chief's feast—he should give us juice."

Then Akin had an idea. "Hundreds of people are going to bring juice and pour it into the pot. I am going to take a gourd of water. One gourd of water can't be bad for so much juice."

The day of the feast came. People put on their best clothes and walked to the chief's house. They stopped at the door and poured their gourds into the pot.

Akin also went to the feast with his wife. He too poured his gourd into the pot. Then he sat down at the table with all the other people.

The chief stood up. "Let's drink, my friends!" he said. And everyone took their glasses. But what they drank was not juice, but water!

So Akin was not the only person to think, "A gourd of water can't be bad for so much juice."

The Comedy Wildlife Photography Awards

Animals are beautiful. But they can be ugly, too. They can be big and scary, or very small. They are always interesting. They can also be funny.

Every year there are many competitions for people who take photos of animals and nature. We all enjoy looking at wildlife, and photos can teach us about animals and our planet. There are competitions for black and white photos, photos of birds, insects, animals at night, animals in the ocean…

But when people see the winning photos, they always love the funny photos. So two photographers, Paul Joynson-Hicks and Tom Sullam, decided to start the first competition for the world's funniest wildlife photos.

In this competition, a team of photographers and comedians choose their favorite photos. The photos must be funny, of course, and make them laugh, but they also have to be very good photos. A lot of the animals in these photos look as if they are smiling, laughing, or making funny faces. Other animals are falling over or photobombing, like in this photo of a bear. There are five winners: the best photo of a land animal, of an animal in the air, of an underwater animal, the best photo by a young photographer, and the best photograph of them all. Thomas Bullivant won the young photographer competition in 2016 with his photo of a zebra, and he was only fifteen years old.
